Now in its 23rd year, the American Bar Association will host its Annual National Institute on Class Actions conference in Nashville on 17th & 18th October 2019.

Practical class action insight will be offered by prominent circuit and district court judges, top professors, in-house counsel and lawyers, including on the latest practical developments in class action, trial techniques and best practices to sharpen your skills.

On Thursday morning London partner, Lianne Craig and her fellow expert panellists will discuss 'Collective Actions on a World Stage—A Global Musical'. Due to social, cultural and political factors, class actions don't play nearly as well abroad as they do in the US. The debate will provide an in-depth insight into how other markets might benefit from class or collective actions as the world becomes more harmonised, and how these actions may look, feel and sound.
